A Summer Survey: Intro to Pen and Ink

Monday-Thursday, 3-6pm | July 14-17, 2025

Course Description

The pinpoint contact that you make with a pen to the page is one of the most personal and focused moments you can have with drawing. It requires of you intimate attention as you articulate the edges you record. The immediate response of a line on a page is the trace of your close communion with your subject and contains the mark of your experience as well as your description of a form. The permanence of ink requires a greater amount of trust in one's hand and in one's eyes, and in our ability to make a mark and let it be on the page. It's also an opportunity to look and take time to decipher what it is in front of you that matters most, and to develop tactics for addressing those shapes or contours.
